Inside this issue:

- 2) Distressed
- 3) Retro
- 4) Cocktail Craze
- 5) The Stackable

Metallics

Metallics, such as stainless steel, are a major player in 2018. It's on trend, a must have staple for all the craft mixologists out there. It's perfect for the patio, elegant diner parties, and everything in between. Metallics offer the versatility we're all seeking, redefining the boundaries of drinkware materials.

Distressed

In 2018, we're putting a lot of effort into looking effortless. The distressed finish is making its mark, bringing along a more raw and worn vibe versus a more clean and crisp feel. Distressed items emulate a natural progression, playing along with the major styling trend of Back to Nature

Retro

Nostalgia for the past is currently a dominant force in glassware. Cut glass and crystal is reminiscent of the styling of the 20's and 30's. Rocks glasses, bar accessories, coupe glasses and more are integrating the glamour that's gone down in history. These pieces offer up a timeless, yet current, elegance.

Cocktail Craze

Cocktail creation is becoming a staple in the beverage and glassware industry.

This is a domain where you can have some fun with flavours, colours, and garnishes: a true blank canvas for creativity. Our industry is responding by offering a wide range of new and trendy items that are sure to take your latest creation to the next level.

The Stackable

Stackable glassware is an essential component of any brewery or restaurant. It's truly irreplaceable in its utility, ease, and durability. This year, we're seeing the limits of the stackable being pushed from the traditional pieces into items that weren't previously available in this form.
